

Acknowledgements

When teaching Commerce Server, I often got asked “Why is there no Commerce Server 2007 book?” I eventually decided to track down the answer and found a book that Wade Wegner started, but that had stopped. I bought the authorship rights from Wade of the work he had done and started on the long haul of finishing the book.

So, obviously my thanks go to Wade Wegner (and to Ravi), legal reasons prevent me from listing them as coauthors, but they have worked hard. All who have provided content have indemnified me that the material is original, but if you find something by mistake from an original work, please drop me a line, so that we can arrange appropriate acknowledgement. Since MSDN is the primary source of information about Commerce Server, should we have inadvertently used their phrasing or content, we acknowledge them here.

Tom Schultz inspired with his work ethic and dedication. Ryan Donovan not only provided outstanding subject matter expertise, but also strong leadership and stewardship. Brad Bont brought extensive hands-on experience and real world knowledge that is hard to find in any discipline or technology, let alone Commerce Server. Kevin Kraus not only brought humor, but a deep understanding of BizTalk that helped immensely with regards to the use of the Commerce adapters. David Hargis brought extensive expertise given his time with the product team, as well as an energy and drive to continue to learn and explore. Without their contributions, this book would not exist. Many thanks to you all.

Thanks also to the rest of the Commerce Server team, especially Scott Cairney. Thanks also to those at Cactus Commerce, especially Arlene Hall and Wanda Cadigan. And Brigitte Gagne and Max.

A final thanks to my favorite football player, Robin Ray Smith.
